CONSUMPTION OF MEATS.

Comparison Between England and th United States. An American statistician has discovered that the people of the United States are the greatest meat consumers in the world. Thus vanishes another of our cherished illusions. The inhabitants of beef eating Britain cannot, we learn with surprise, tackle much more than 100 pounds of meat apiece yearly, while 30 pounds per head is a good record for some other civilized nations. Now, your American citizen makes himself responsible for 175 pounds of flesh per annum.

As a corn consumer, too, he is equally illustrious, devouring 45 bushels of cereals a year, as against 16 bushels consumed in Europe. Clearly either as carnivorous or graminivorous animals we cannot hold a candle to our Yankee consins. - London Financial Times. The statistician's comparison does not reflect at all on the meat and bread eating capacity of the Briton. In mere capacity the Yankee willingly yields to him the paim. It is inability to procure the food that so seriously handicaps him in the eating contest. The difference between 100 and 175 pounds, great as it is, by no means accurately measures the difference between the standards of living among the middle and poorer classes in the two countries. The wealthy classes consume, it is safe to assume, as much as do the similar class in our own country, or say, at a rough estimate, 25 of the 100 and 175 pounds respectively. There remains 75 pounds to be

Of these amounts the English middle class consumes, say 25 pounds, and the corresponding class here 35 pounds, leaving 115 pounds for the poorest classes in the United States and only 50 pounds to the poorest classes in England. With this modification of the statistician's figures the comparison is a significant contrast of the plenty here and scarcity abroad, particularly among the working

THE TARIFF BILL OF 1890.

Every Protectionist Should Indorse It at the Polls Nov. 4. The tariff bill of 1890 has received the president's signature. The Free-traders have delayed its final passage as long as possible, but the pledge of 1888 has finally been fulfilled by a Republican congresa. The bill will not satisfy every Protectionist from Maine to Texas, but, all things considered, it is the best tariff legislation we have ever known. It will reduce the revenue by at least $30,000,-000, and it will keep at home another $50,000,000 to be used in the development of new industries. To have framed and passed such a bill-a bill partial to no interest or locality, but for the interests of the labor and industries of the whole country-required no little understanding, tact, judgment and courage. All honor then to the ways and means committee and its able chairman. to the finance committee and to the Re publican party.

The bill should be accepted in good faith by all. The business men of the country will rejoice that it has at last become a law. Manufacturers and farmers alike will be protected, and each will enhance the interests of the other. The importers will not be pleased, neither will foreign nations. This is the greatest tribute that could be paid the work of our national legislators. And now we ask every Protectionist to indorse the bill at the polls on Nov. 4. Follow the example set by the voters of the First Maine district. Show Messrs. McKinley and Aldrich and their associates that their work is approved. Do not simply elect Protectionist congressmen, but make their majorities emphatic, as did the voters of the Pine Tree state. Give Free-trade such a set back that it will not again come to the surface for a generation, if ever, in this country, which was born, nourished and thrives through the beneficent effects of Protection.

Protection-Its Object and Results From a symposium in The Voice of Sept. 18 we take the following on Protection, by Edward H. Ammidown:

The object of Protection is to develop and diversify our industries, and there by not only to provide occupation for every variety of talent, but a home market for every product which the boundless natural resources of the country can supply. The greater the diversity of our industries and the larger their output the more beneficial they are to our people of all classes and the lower the cos of production. The trresistible law of competition will level down prices to consumers to the lowest scale at which any product can be afforded with the same average profits that attend other

Protective legislation looks to the employment of labor at rates fitting the dignity of American citizenship. It looks to the creation and maintenance of a home market for the products of the soil, free from charges for long transportation and from the uncertainties of distant markets. The census and the national bureau of statistics prove that it has accomplished these purposes: that the people have been employed at liberal wages, and the products of the soil have been provided with a home market. Notwith the vast area of our farms and the num bers employed on them, which are se least double those engaged in any other form of industry, our agricultural products are substantially consumed at home, at prices which are on the average for the whole country higher than are received by the farmers of any other part of the world.

This result is secured by the development of American industries under Pro For tire and carriage bolts the best

The London Iron and Coal Trades Re view says of the McKinley bill that it "is framed in complete defiance of the wishes and interests of foreign countries," and it hopes to see the measure disappear "in the operation known as "the slaughter of the innocents."

It has been ascertained that grave robburs have been at work for some time, and have carried away several bodies from the Brother-hood consetery, Mt. Holly, N. J. It is believed that the bodies are being stolen for the discetting from. The cemetery is now being guarded in the night time.

One-third of the goods imported into Mexico go from the United States, and two-thirds of those exported come here.
